ABSTRACT

This report deals with techniques for reducing the optical volume of devices which produce time delays for phased array radars using true time delay. The techniques are applied to a particular optical configuration, a binary cell. In the report first the binary cell is introduced, then general techniques for volume reduction are discussed. Finally the particular binary cell with reduced volume is presented.